Unit Description

This unit is about buying brands rather than independent contracting. If you are buying for a department store you are likely to be responsible for the sourcing of a portfolio of brands suitable to a given market sector and identified consumer profiles.

In order to select, present and manage a portfolio of brands, an understanding of brand DNA, brand adjacencies and brand touch points is vital to appeal to a target market without risking style repetition or sales cannibalisation.

Students will learn about the differences in pricing architecture, margins and price positioning compared to that in own brand buying and will see this in the context of building a portfolio of complementary brands.

This unit will involve an exploration of brands through case studies covering different specialist types of branding and retailing including e-commerce, lifestyle brands and luxury brands. Through comparative shop reporting methods, students will identify a gap in the market for a new brand within a chosen sector and present a proposal for evidence of the diagnostic research skills launch through the 7Ps of marketing including: people, product, pricing, place, process, promotion, physical evidence.

The Five Principles underpin the Mindsets and Skillsets Manifesto and are the foundation upon which all course curriculum frameworks and unit specifications are based. The relevant Principles as stated below have been mapped against the Learning Outcomes relevant to each course unit and at each level (see Programme Specifications for full description of the Five Principles):

1. Cultivate / Where the individual thrives.
2. Collaborate / Where disciplines evolve.
3. Integrate / Where education engages industry.
4. Advocate / Where purpose meets practice.
5. Originate / creativity meets technology.
